The world is at risk of losing effective antibiotics altogether, as the big pharmaceutical companies abandon the expensive pursuit of developing new strains of the drug, desperately needed to replace drugs made ineffective because of microbial resistance.

The World Health Organisation (WHO) warned, last month, that declining private chronic ailments like arthritis. Smaller companies that have stepped into the breach are going bankrupt, discouraging further research and development.

Drug resistant diseases already cause at least 700,000 deaths globally each year, a figure that could increase to 10 million deaths globally per year by
